Twin White Squash

Good Tobacco Crop

Mr. Covington and his son, Howard Julian Covington, have planted this same field for the past seven consecutive years and they attribute their fine crop to the turning under of green cover-crop each spring to hold moisture. They use 2,000 pounds of fertilizer yearly and report that this crop should yeild about 2,000 pounds per acre.

American Consumer Now Part Of A Complex Trade Network

The American consumer is now part of a complex trade network that extends far beyond the supermarket or department store and into the affairs of other nations around the world.

That point was stressed today by Kenneth E. Frick, Administrator of the Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service (ASCS), the agency that administers the Federal Government's Farm Commodity programs.

"The U.S. consumer is a world consumer," Frick said. "His monetary and commodity needs are only a thread woven into a worldwide economic system. That's why the causes of our rising food prices are more complex that at first apparent."

Frick told the ASCS Eastern Regional Conference that a major part of the food picture is a growing food appetite around the globe. He noted that not only is the world growing by about 80 million people a year, but the world's peoples are getting more affluent. And increased buying power, he said, brings increased demand for more and better food.

For example, he said that since 1960, America's overall food consumption - per capita - has increased nearly 8 percent, while during the same period our consumption of beef increased by nearly 40 percent. He said other countries are experiencing similar trends, as reflected in our heavy exports of soybeans, grain and other feeds to help meet international demand for more meat and livestock products.

"Yet more and faster production is not always under man's complete control," Frick noted. "World food production has suffered some devastating setbacks the past couple of years. Russia's 1972 grain crop was frozen by the worst winter in half a century, then scored by a summer drought. India's nonsoon rains petered out, and Peru's fish supply diminished. Here in the United States, an incredibly wet fall caused problems and last winter's hard freezes cut into our cattle and swine herds. Then in many areas, persistent rains brought severe flooding - which delayed or even prevented the planting of many 1973 crops."

This unpredictable chain of events, Frick said, has contributed to feed and farm product supply problems around the world.

"Some people ask why we don't forget around the world situation and keep all our products at home," Frick said. "But we must realize that our current standard of living would simply dissolve without import - export system. We need fuels and raw materials that other nations can produce. We've grown fond of their bananas, coffee and shoes. We've developed strong appetites for foreign automobiles, television sets and other low-cost goods. When we keep demanding all those foreign products - and we do - we should remember that American farm products are popular elsewhere in the world too. The strong world prices on food are our gain, since our farm products are among the most attractive commodities we have to trade."

Even with domestic food prices on the rise, Frick said, the American consumer has been spending only about 16 percent of his aftertax income on groceries,compared with 23 percent in 1952.It should be remembered, he said, that there has been a phenomenal rise in the consumer's disposal income.

In other remarks, Frick reminded the ASCS conference that Secretary of Agriculture Earl L. Butz is determined to remove all restrictions from American farmers and encourage all-out production to meet strong market demands.

Evidence of that determination, Frick said, is that in 1974 there will be no set-aside of land for feed grains, wheat or cotton, and maintenance of conserving base acreages will not be required. Moreover, he said, long-term retired land under the Cropland Adjustment and Cropland Conversion programs may be used for crops next year.

Frick also noted that during the 1974 crop year there will be a Rural Environmental Assistance Program (REAP) to provide cost - sharing assistance for farm practices that provide long-term conservation and environmental benefits.
